Handbook of Muslims in India: Empirical and Policy Perspectives (Oxford India Handbooks)

The Handbook analyzes the status of the Muslims in India by looking at the discussion initiated by the 2006 report of the Prime Minister's High Level Committee on the Status of Muslims in India, headed by Justice Rajinder Sachar. The Sachar Committee Report used large-scale empirical data to analyze the socio-economic conditions of the Indian Muslims, thus highlighting the heterogeneity within the community. This volume takes the debate initiated by the Report further, bringing together the most recent empirical work on equity-related concerns with a focus on human development parameters, in a comprehensive and thematic manner.

The first section examines the socio-historical context of Muslims in India, thus setting the tone for analysis of their demographic and educational conditions in a comparative perspective. The second and third sections analyze the socio-economic conditions of the Muslims by exploring the various dimensions of the labor and employment market. The final section considers the policy options that are available to improve the condition of the Indian Muslims.
