"A Distant Dream" is about mysterious beauty, environmental insult, leaving California for South Dakota, improbable onus, mountaintop success, psychotic devastation, and finding refuge. Mysterious beauty is found in the heart of a charming girl whose earliest gift is that of captivation. Things could have gone either way for Sarah, but for the tipping point. If only the insult that caused her eventual spilling over into prognosis could be identified. While it's true that multiple environmental things gather to concoct neurology gone awry, a corporate environmental irresponsibility that touched her family found fame in Hollywood. Yet, there's also what happened post notoriety. Portions of the story are quite ordinary in scope, while much of what's told isn't. Conveyance of extraordinary events reveal mere men and women who were occasionally fashioned like superheroes. It sometimes feels like "Rain Man" went out of his way to meet "Forrest Gump" only so the two of them could challenge society's ideals. Right after that, "Thor" also got involved.
